Newsletter

From the State Director

In this issue, I will try to condense the main points of the 1993 MUFON Symposium presentation "AREA 51, BOB LAZAR, AND DISINFORMATION — A REEVALUATION" by George Knapp. This will not be easy to do. It turns out that George Knapp has done more than just investigate Bob Lazar. He has been privy to a great deal of information about Area 51, past and present, and his presentation was loaded with accounts given to him by other people.

Knapp was chief investigative reporter for KLAS-TV in Las Vegas from 1981 – 1991. In addition to doing documentaries on organized crime, political corruption, and the illegal drug trade, he produced UFOs: The Best Evidence and a follow-up which won many awards. One of these was UPI's national award for Best Individual Achievement. He has done his homework!

Knapp says that the parentage of Area 51 can be traced directly to the premise that alien vehicles and wreckage have been acquired over past decades. There might be disagreement about details, but Ufology seems comfortable with this general premise.

Assuming that such hardware exists, Area 51 is near the top of the list of sites to test it. It lies in a sparsely populated region, surrounded by mountains, virtually impenetrable, and is the location of choice for the most classified research and testing our military has done over the years.

It is the best facility today, and forty years ago, was even better. The CIA picked the spot for the base and it was built in 1955 under CIA control.

Knapp says that it is difficult to get a handle on who runs Area 51. The Air Force, CIA, Army, Navy, NASA, and DOE have all maintained a presence along with such private firms as EG&G, Lockheed, Northrop, and Hughes. But no one will claim the facility! In 1978, an Air Force spokesman admitted that classified projects were housed there, but had no knowledge of Area 51 being controlled by the Pentagon, CIA or DOE. Knapp jokingly suggested that maybe it's run by Indian Affairs or Fish & Game!

We all know of the attempts of people to get near Area 51 to observe craft flying around at night — sometimes these attempts are made from White Sides Mountain. Knapp made the almost unbelievable statement that base personnel always know when somebody is on the mountain, which forces them to shut down operations and wait out the interlopers. This drives them up a wall! People on the mountain are often buzzed by hostile helicopters. The Lincoln County Sheriff's squad enforces a ban on photographs, although a Dallas TV crew challenged the ban, contending that a law prohibiting photography on public lands is unconstitutional. The Sheriff backed down and let them go.

Area 51 keeps expanding its boundaries and a new land grab seems to be in the works. Rural Nevadans argue that since the Cold War is over and the Russians can spy on the base from space, the only people denied a peek are American citizens and members of Congress.

It seems that Congressional interest is growing. Delegations have visited Area 51 recently and there is increased scrutiny on civilian contracts related to Groom. Congress wants to know what's going on. One recent visitor was completely dazzled by what he saw, and said that whatever we've got out there is decades ahead of the rest of the world. The ferocious roar reported by residents in and around the area is assumed to be the Aurora aircraft.

Knapp contends that the sounds may actually be emanating from an advanced sonic weapon.

The connection of all this to spacecraft is obvious to ufologists. Hundreds of people have seen glowing orbs in the night skies over the area. Aviation types are convinced that a new generation of black aircraft is under development. Knapp tells us that writer Bill Scott of Aviation Week and Space Technology wrote that what's out there relies on "exotic propulsion systems and aerodynamic designs not fully understood." Because Scott came close to saying "flying saucer," a senior at the magazine complained. Scott was ordered to avoid stories which would lend credence to tales of UFOs at Groom Lake.

NBC News, which traveled to Nevada in search of the Aurora, commented that the glowing ball photographed over Groom Lake "appears to defy the laws of physics... like a flying saucer."

Thousands of people have flocked to the area and created a level of public interest that has resulted in congressional inquiries. Neither Congress nor the Defense Department claim to know what's being flown in Area 51. During earlier programs, the military had no reservations about lying to the public, but appropriate committees in Congress knew what was going on because they were authorizing the funds. Whatever is being flown in the area these past few years is, however, a mystery to Congress. This secret has also been kept from key personnel at DOD. Knapp has been told by first-hand sources that meetings have been held at the very highest levels — tough questions were asked but there is simply no current program which can explain what has been reported by witnesses. Congressional investigators who are familiar with all funded black projects say there is no Aurora, and no funding for such a program, PERIOD!

To Congressional personnel, this raises the unpleasant possibility that secret programs have been taken outside the government. This scenario is being taken seriously by people in Washington. Knapp says that they have an interest in Area 51 programs, including the rumors of alien technology, but will obviously not publicly admit this.

Since Congress steadfastly asserts that no funds have been earmarked for "black projects," it is faced with the unpleasant possibility that secret programs have been taken outside the United States Government.

Stories of UFOs at Area 51 did not begin with Bob Lazar. Knapp has heard these stories for a long time. He credits Bill Moore (who has repeatedly taken Lazar to task) as being responsible as anyone for bringing Area 51 to the public's attention. He released the so-called "Aquarius Document" in 1983, which mentions Project Snowbird, a program supposedly underway since 1972 to test-fly alien craft. Moore says that his present sources admit to an alien presence in Nevada, but that it is west of Groom Lake.

Members of the Groom family, for whom the mountains are named, say that stories of alien craft in Area 51 go back to the 1950s. Tim Good has written that one of his sources told him that an alien disc was stored on the Nellis Range since 1953. A man named Michael Hunt, who worked for the AEC at Groom Lake in the 60s, saw the disc in flight. The program was called "Project Redlight." Wendell Stevens tells of military men who worked in Nevada in the 50s who claimed knowledge of alien [spacecraft] being tested under auspices of something called "Redlight."

Other technical people have told Knapp of maneuvers observed on radar, of seeing a disc covered with a tarp, and of being buzzed by a glowing sphere. A Las Vegas attorney, while in the military, witnessed a craft land that was having technical difficulty.

Knapp tells of other testimony. A golf pro had worked at Nellis and developed some close friendships with officers. He and his friends were watching a TV program about Roswell during a golf trip. One of his friends, a Lt. Colonel, confided that he had been briefed on Roswell, that the recovery was true, and that some of it was stored at Area 51.

From 1976 – 1979 a tax preparer provided services for several persons at Area 51. He was told much about base operations and of large sums of money being diverted from legitimate programs into the UFO effort. (UFOs sound legitimate to me! — Moss.) He was told that alien discs were stored there. The day after giving Knapp information over the phone, he was visited by two agents who wanted to "lean on him" about talking to reporters.

This is a good place to stop — we haven't gotten to Bob Lazar yet, so I'll continue the summary in the next newsletter. This column has lately been an attempt to relay information to you about what goes on at the annual MUFON Symposium in July. Full accounts of these presentations are contained in the 1993 INTERNATIONAL UFO SYMPOSIUM PROCEEDINGS available from MUFON.

FYI The Steamshovel Press — That's the name of a quarterly journal that excavates drivel in the weird world of conspiracies. Kenn Thomas, its editor, compiled a partial tally of them for the Washington Post. Some of these conjectures (not Thomas's) are:

- Three of the four Feds killed in the bungled raid on the Waco Branch Davidian compound were Clinton bodyguards during the presidential campaign. It is conjectured that they may have been murdered.
- The death rate overall among the Clinton campaign staff and in his administration is abnormally high. The conjecture is that some of them may have been killed by "the intelligence community."
- Bobby Ray Inman, Clinton's withdrawn nominee for Secretary of Defense, might have been the "Deep Throat" of Watergate and he knows more than he has ever said about the government's supposed liaison with space aliens. (A delicious conjecture!)

The big one that got away

The January 1994 issue of UFO Enigma (UFO Study Group of Greater St. Louis), contained some interesting accounts of reported Missouri UFO encounters as provided by Amateur Ufology News. This particular case occurred to a resident of the southwest area of Missouri.

In July of 1990, a life-long fisherman, 76 years of age, was doing some crappie fishing one evening.

"It must have been right around half-past eleven when it happened. I'd just caught a nice one and was reaching for a fresh minnow when all of a sudden, everything in the boat lit up and turned yellow."

"It was kinda like my eyes was telling me it but my ears was saying, 'No, it ain't!'"

"It come from above so I looked up and here was this big square yellow light with a bunch of little ones around it in a circle. They was all yellow but the little ones weren't near as bright as the big one. They were just hanging there, about even with the tops of the trees on top of the bluff."

"I just sat there and kinda looked it over, and figured somebody up there was doing me the same way. This kept on for a couple of minutes, then the big square light went off and them little ones got real dim, so's you could hardly see them. I reckon they did that so's nobody else would see it, 'cause there was a car went across the bridge right about then."

"Anyhow, soon as that car got gone out of sight, the little lights got brightened back up, but the big square one got left off. Then it went to moving off north, real slow like, and it got kinda hard to see pretty quick. Once it got a ways off, they must've turned that big one back on for a bit 'cause I saw a spot on the water get all lit up like me and my boat did. Then it went off again and I couldn't see it no more at all."

The fisherman said the object was "like a big jelly bean, only flat at the bottom." He estimated it to be 25-30 feet long and about 8-10 feet across. The big square light was about 4 feet square in the center of the craft and it had a circle light just about touching each of the corners of the square and three more on each side of the square — a total of 16 lights. The small lights looked to be the size of car headlights, not as bright, but yellow — like headlights on a car with a bad battery. He detected no heat, odor or sound at any time. "It was kinda like my eyes was telling me it was up there but my ears was saying 'No, it ain't!'"

After seeing the object, what did he do? "Well, it was gone and there wasn't nothing else to look at, so I went back to my fishing. That's what I was there for!"

UFOs in Catlett? Holy cats!

The December 16, 1993 USA Today reported the UFO experiences of Clare Holcomb, a resident of Catlett, VA. Holcomb says her first abduction took place on a deserted road near the Moonraker Equestrian Academy, the farm where she lives and teaches horseback riding.

On December 15, 1991, at 7:30 p.m. Holcomb was returning from nearby Winchester, VA when she notice a pair of low-flying bright lights.

"I stopped the car and got out," she says. "This light was so bright I couldn't look at it directly. There wasn't a sound at all. The last thing I remember doing was blinking."

What seemed to be only a moment later, Holcomb was driving five miles further down the road and feeling nauseated. She arrived home more than an hour later than usual, her ear lobes inflamed and bleeding, her pierced earrings inserted backwards!

Holcomb retrieved this memory about a year ago along with childhood abduction memories.

"They seem to have an infinite variety of uncomfortable things they can do to you," Holcomb says.

Another Catlett resident, a policy analyst for the U.S. Forest Service, said "They've threatened that someday they'll take us and we're not coming back."

Both have sought professional help from psychologist David Ruxer, who has treated other UFO abductees.

"It's not really a post traumatic stress these people feel because it is an ongoing stress," he says. "This people are telling you it happened last night and it's going to happen tomorrow."

A little closer to home

A recent conversation about the Travis Walton movie (Fire in the Sky) produced a surprising revelation by an acquaintance. "I think I may have been abducted," she offered.

Maureen (fictitious name) has always appeared to be only slightly interested in UFO phenomena but, in fact, has done extensive reading about the subject. However, it was some years before she pieced together her experiences and began thinking she, too, may have been (and/or still is) an abductee.

When asked why she thought an abduction may have occurred — and when — she said it could have been when she was in second or third grade.

"I remember being in church on Sunday with another little friend. I have memory of giggling over the fur stole on the lady in the pew ahead of us. The fox head with its beady eyes seemed to be staring at us, and we whispered back and forth to each other making up stories about the fox! I know I was wearing a pastel colored dress. My next recollection is being severely scolded for not coming home directly after church. I sobbed to my mother that I had, and that I couldn't remember being anywhere else, but my mother pointed to the clock and it was after 2 o'clock. I think church started about 10 or 10:30 in the morning, and it lasted about an hour. My house was about 6 blocks from the church.

There was a smear of blood on the back of my dress, and later that evening, as I was getting undressed for the bath, my mother noticed a cut on the back of my upper right thigh. She became very upset and said it looked like an incision. Again she questioned my whereabouts but I could remember nothing else between laughing over the fox stole and walking into my house."

Maureen recalls three missing time incidents during childhood, and other experiences in her adult life lead her to believe she is an abductee. There was a time when she was very fearful of what was happening to her, but she says now she just accepts the "strange dreams and other things." She did not want to explain "other things." Maureen is a career person with a grown family, and is moderately active in her church. Her sense of humor, she says, gets her over these "weird hurtles!"

The Groom Lake Grab

Most of us are aware by this time that the Air Force is trying to seize more land around the Groom Lake weapons testing facility. Fed up with the public hiking the hilltops to view the base that doesn't exist, they've decided the best way to put a stop to the curiosity seekers (aka witnesses) is to claim the land for purposes of planting endangered flora! While that may sound just ducky for environmentalists, it is clear the Air Force or whomever really is in charge of Area 51 has no intention of bending to public demands of government openness and accountability.

Glenn Campbell, Secretary of the White Sides Defense Committee, "a citizen group challenging the proposed land seizure at Groom Lake," initiated a letter campaign aimed at demanding a public hearing on the Groom Lake land seizure. Realistically, Campbell knows that in the end, the Air Force will win the land — but he maintains that a public hearing might force the Air Force into providing a more satisfying explanation for the "base that doesn't exist."

The date of Campbell's letter was December 29, so we contacted him via fax to ask if the letter writing campaign was effective. His faxed reply follows.

"The letter writing campaign was successful, and a hearing on the Groom Land Grab will be held in Las Vegas on Wednesday, March 2. This will probably be the last opportunity for public comment on the proposed withdrawal..."

No need to worry. Things are already unraveling badly for the Air Force. A lawyer has volunteered his services to saving the land, and he has developed a strong legal case. CNN will be at the hearing as well as a lot of local press, so there is no chance that this action will "sneak" through without a lot of scrutiny."

In answer to our question about subscribing to his newsletter, The Groom Lake Desert Rat, Campbell suggested that anyone with an Internet mail address can subscribe to his free on-line newsletter. Just send a message to him at:

Roswell Revisited

Rep. Steve Schiff, from Albuquerque, NM, thinks its about time the federal government opened up on whether space aliens crashed their flying saucer in New Mexico back on July 2, 1947. So what's the best way to find out? Well, since Schiff's on the House Government Operations Committee which oversees the Government Accounting Office, he requested an investigation — and the GAO's already at work.

"It's not a light thing to ask a government agency to look into something, but the government has been accused of a cover-up," Schiff said in a recent interview. Although he's curious about the Roswell incident, Schiff stated, "I would not ask for an investigation of something I was just curious about. The issue is whether the government is being forthright with the American people, and that is a serious issue to me."

The 1947 crash, known as the "Roswell Incident" because it happened about 75 miles northwest of Roswell, NM, has been a focus of UFO books and countless discussions for years. The claim is that a flying saucer crashed on a ranch owned by Mac Brazel, and that government teams whisked away the wreckage and the bodies of aliens. The remains are said to have been taken first to Fort Worth and then to what is now Wright-Patterson AFB in Ohio.

Schiff decided to look into the allegations after receiving letters from people interested in UFOs, including a couple from people who claimed to have personally witnessed the wreckage at the site.

Last March, he wrote to Les Aspin, Secretary of Defense, requesting an Air Force briefing on the Roswell incident. They told him they couldn't brief him because all the documents from the investigation known as Project Blue Book had been sent to the National Archives.

Schiff then contacted the National Archives only to be told they aren't in the business of giving briefings!

"...I got tired of going back and forth, he said. That's when Schiff decided to go to the GAO.

Although the GAO primarily looks into fiscal matters, the idea peaked their interest and they decided to give it a go.

So far, the GAO investigator has had nothing to report other than "getting stonewalled" by the Dept. Of Defense. "That made them that much more interested in the investigation," Schiff said.

Colorado heats up

The February issue of the SOUTH DAKOTA MUFON contained an interesting article sent to them by Don Johnson, MUFON investigator from Denver. Some of this information was heard by Johnson on a radio talk show hosted by Brian Norton.

This past January, an unexplained crash or fire was seen on NORAD's radar screens in the Colorado Springs area. This started what turned out to be two weeks filled with helicopter and B-52 sightings and other strange occurrences near the area of the "fire."

When NORAD passed the information on to the Federal Emergency Management Agency, it notified local authorities in Rock Creek, a foothills region west of Monte Vista in southwest Colorado, that a "possible fire" was burning in their area. Usually, this turns out to be farmers' and loggers' routine burns. However, air and ground searches over the next two days found nothing. Four wheelers joined the search over a 60 mile radius and neighbors were questioned, but to no avail. But residents in the area began noticing other things. Blue flares could be seen in the night sky, and three helicopters were observed flying in search patterns. Two had large blue strobe lights, and a third had several lights, but because it was so dark, it was impossible to detect color or identifying marks.

The Army and National Guard denied they had any aircraft in the area.

A retired Air Force person (rank unknown) watched three B-52's flying in formation at a high altitude. They dove down very close to the ground and flew through the valley. Once out of the valley, they regained their altitude and disappeared.

Eight days after the original "fire" was spotted on radar, NORAD reportedly picked up two more ground explosions!

Brian Norton conjectures that the original heat source detected by NORAD was the result of a crash. The B-52's were sent to pinpoint the crash site. The helicopters picked up the debris and after removing what they could, blew up whatever remained.

The last sighting was of a black helicopter making a final check of the area.

As far as we know, things in Monte Vista are once again back to normal!

Who is F.E.M.A. and why do we care?

Most people have never heard of the Federal Emergency Management Agency but this non-elected body has a somewhat secret budget in the billions and has more power than the President of the United States. It was originally created to ensure the survival of the US government in the event of a nuclear attack. It is deemed to be the federal coordinating body during times of domestic disasters, such as earthquakes and hurricanes. And, it was created by executive order.

In 1935, the Emergency Management Act was passed saying that the President can issue executive orders in times of national emergency. And you may not know it, but since that time, the U.S. has always had a declared state of "National Emergency!" (You'll find these declarations in the Combined Federal Register and the records of Congress.) Since only Congress has the authority to appropriate funds, the executive order creating this agency is unconstitutional, or at least, should not have been funded.

An executive order, whether constitutional or not, becomes effective upon publication in the Federal Register. Congress is bypassed.

For several years, General Richard Secord and Lt. Col. Oliver North were in charge of FEMA, during which time, just grew and grew and grew...

At least some of the black helicopter traffic and be attributed to FEMA. And in addition to floods and earthquakes, it has been given responsibility for new disasters such as urban forest fires, home heating emergencies, refugee situations, urban riots, and emergency planning for nuclear and toxic incidences. Executive Order #12656 appointed the National Security Council as the principal body that should consider emergency powers. This allows the government to increase domestic surveillance of US citizens and restrict the freedom of movement within our country, granting to the government the right to isolate large groups of civilians. The National Guard may be used to seal all borders and take control of US air space and all ports of entry.

Here are a few more orders written, and although not yet implemented, could be at any time. The Constitution of the United States would be suspended, using FEMA to do it:

Executive Order #10990—allows the government to take over all modes of transportation and to control all highways and seaports.

Executive Order #10995—allows government seizure and control of all communication media.

Executive Order # 10997—allows the government to take over all electrical power, gas, petroleum, fuel and minerals.

Executive Order #11001—allows the government to take over all health, education and welfare functions.

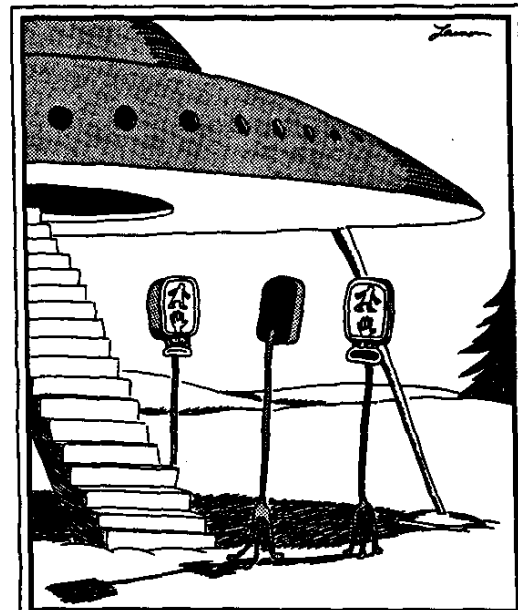

Executive Order #11002—designates the Postmaster General to operate a national registration of all persons.

Executive Order #11051—specifies the responsibilities of the Office of Emergency Planning and gives authorization to put all executive orders into effect in times of increased international tensions and economic or financial crisis.

Executive Order #11310—grants authority to the Department of Justice to enforce the plans set out in executive orders, to institute industrial support, to establish judicial and legislative liaison, to control all aliens, to operate penal and correctional institutions and to advise and assist the President.

Executive Order #11921—allows the Federal Emergency Preparedness Agency to develop plans to establish control over the mechanisms of production and distribution of energy sources, wages, salaries, credit and the flow of money in US financial institutions in any undefined national emergency. It also provides that when a state of emergency is declared by the President, Congress cannot review the action for six months.

'Roswell,' the movie: It's a wrap!

UFO Clipping Service
DAILY RECORD, ROSWELL, NM—Dec. 20, 1993
Credit: P. Davids Excerpts: Nancy Fleming, Staff Writer

It took nearly four and a half years, but Executive Producer Paul Davids announced recently that "Roswell" is finally "in the can!" The movie, based on the book "UFO Crash at Roswell" by Kevin D. Randle and Donald R. Schmitt, tells the story of the crash of a flying object near Corona, New Mexico.

The movie is set to air on cable's Showtime sometime between May and July and stars Kyle MacLachlan (Twin Peaks), Kim Greist, country singer Dwight Yoakam and Martin Sheen.

MacLachlan stars as Colonel Jesse Marcel, the Roswell Army Air Force Base intelligence officer who investigated the crash. Greist plays Marcel's wife, Vy.

Yoakam takes on the role of Mac Brazel, the ranch hand who finds the strange debris from the crash, and Martin Sheen is Townsend — a kind of "deep throat" character.

After the 28 days of filming on location in Bisbee, AZ and Los Angeles, there's still post production work to be done which includes editing, music and some optical effects. Davids and Director/Producer reported on how "Roswell" came about and what viewers can look forward to in the film.

"Our movie is doing something quite different," said Kagan. "We are really taking a look at all of the points of view that are derived from the incident."

"I want to emphasize that it's not a UFO movie that we've made here...this is not a science-fiction movie. It doesn't have that style," Davids reported.

"We've made a human military drama, a drama about a town, a community, a military base and what happened to the people that were involved in this incident through the years and how it changed their lives."

Davids, himself, reported an unidentified flying object sighting near Pasadena, CA. This was the impetus which led to his involvement with investigators Randle and Schmitt.

For Kagan, UFOs symbolize life and its mysteries. "I think the entire issue of UFOs is something that reflects all the issues that we today are dealing with — personal, governmental and cosmic power; issues of truth and belief; what is real and what real and what you think is real."

"I have experienced a number of moments where I realized there is far more to reality than what we can touch and feel."

A lot of people worked on this movie because they have a really strong conviction that the truth about the Roswell incident should come out," Davids said, adding that the drama comes from four questions:

"What was the story that led to the military announcing that they had a flying saucer... what led to them denying that they had one... why did so many military people who were involved keep their silence on this for the better part of their lives... and why did so many begin to speak out later?"

In order to capture the impact the 1947 incident had on the people involved, the movie deals with the characters in two time periods — first in '47 at the time of the crash, then 30 years later at the reunion.

To capture what the alien bodies allegedly found near the crash site may have looked like, Steve Johnson, creator of special effect characters, was hired.

Davids was quick to point out, "We do make you wait to see what you want to see — the answers come slowly. It's like peeling back the layers of an onion as you gradually get to see deeper and deeper into what went on."

Both Kagan and Davids said they hope the movie will open up a more serious dialogue on the Roswell incident.

"The more aware you are in your own life about how much more there is to life, the better off the time you spend can be," Kagan said.
